

iPeer

Connecting new and experienced students in the distance Masters of Library and Information Science program at the University of Washington iSchool.

Have questions about how to juggle your work and family obligations with schoolwork? Do you need some insight into navigating through the program? Or maybe you just want to connect with other distance students living nearby or with the same career goals? iPeer matches incoming distance students with students who have faced these same problems. Benefit from the wisdom of experience, and fill out this questionnaire to be matched to another student in the dMLIS program.

All responses will be held in confidence and only viewed by program administrators Sarah Evans and Linda Nixon. The information shared will strictly be used to match peers and organize distance students living in proximity of each other. Once you submit a questionnaire, you will be contacted within seven days with the name and email address of a fellow student.

Our hope is that this program will result in a stronger dMLIS community and a more fulfilling experience for each student.

Feel free to email with comments or questions.

To learn more about the Information School, visit <http://www.ischool.washington.edu/>.